

Integrated Primary Healthcare

The federal government's health reform agenda has focussed attention on the Australian healthcare system in a way which has not occurred for many years. An opportunity exists for reform which serves the interest of the community by improving the integration of care across settings, disciplines and services.

In this presentation, Marcus will discuss the requirements for integration at a service and system level and the enablers of integrated care. Opportunities for physiotherapists and our profession will be discussed, with some challenges for our profession and professional leaders articulated.
